

Institute of Public Health/SARG

Critical Issues in Minority Health Symposium

“Threshold Language and Other Health Policies and Ethnic Minority Populations”

Lonnie Snowden, PhD

Professor School of Social Welfare
Center for Mental Health Services Research and University of California, Berkeley

Lonnie R. Snowden is Professor in the School of Social Welfare at the University of California, Berkeley, with joint appointments in the School of Public Health and in the Department of Psychology. He is Director of the U.C. Berkeley-U.C.S.F. Center for Mental Health Services Research, and has served on numerous review and advisory committees for the National Institutes of Mental Health and Drug Abuse. He contributed sections to the first-ever Surgeon Generals Report on Mental Health and served as Co- Scientific Editor of the supplement “Mental Health: Culture, Race, and Ethnicity”: A Supplement to Mental Health: A Report of the Surgeon General. Currently, he is Principal Investigator on an NIMH-funded study of racial and ethnic disparities in children’s use of the psychiatric emergency room, and he awaits NIMH funding of another study of threshold language policy and access and quality of mental health care.

February 15, 2006

3:30pm – 5:00pm

University of New Mexico

Basic Medical Science Building – Room #203

Sponsors: Masters in Public Health Program, Institute for Public Health, Southwest Addictions Research Group (SARG), New Mexico Public Health Association, New Mexico Department of Health, Mental Health Mentorship and Education Program, Institute for Ethics, Center for Native American Health (CNAH), CASAA, Departments of Family and Community Medicine, Psychiatry, Division of Epidemiology, Medicine, Peace Studies, Anti-Racism Training Institute of the Southwest, University of New Mexico School of Medicine Office of Diversity.

